Creating layers Photoshop uses layers for every edit you make. Your image is always broken down into layers. This enables multiple images, that is, layers, to be changed on the same image. For example, a layer can contain two or more images, a layer can contain several layers, or a layer can include a stroke or outline. As shown in Figure 10-3, an image can have any number of layers. The layer masks allow you to composite multiple images and shapes. Without their help, you could not combine images or shapes, as an image and layer are separated entities. In fact, the Layer Mask is often referred to as the gimp or Photoshop on steroids. (The Layer Mask is an option that isn't available on every Photoshop installation. For more information about Layer Masks, see the later section "Using layer masks.") FIGURE 10-3: Layers are the primary way to manipulate images.

Author: thepaprika Orange light, the first time I saw it. It was the light in my dream. Orange and red and incandescent and sometimes I saw someone. A glow, a man, a man with sword and sometimes he was invisible or he was the moon, the bright bright moon and I watched him, the man with the sword. On my left side and on my right side, with both eyes and in the middle of my head. I would see it and then it would be gone. I didn't think about it though, I just watched, a dream as if it were a movie, a movie about a man and the moon. He was just a man, a man who had a sword and the moon was the bright moon on and off in my dream. Blue it was blue. The blue was in my eyes. The blue was all over everything, the blue of the sky and the blue of the sea and I thought it was the sky in my eyes. I remember that and I tried to tell someone and I tried to describe it but nobody understood because I was an only child, I was the only child at that time. I was like a princess and I looked like a princess, the blue in my eyes, I told someone that there was blue in my eyes and the eyes couldn't see blue because there weren't any, it was dark, not the time of the day, not the time of the night, nothing, just dark and I said blue and they said I was wrong. I was watching a movie in my head, my head and I just looked and I watched and the movie went on and on, there were scenes I didn't see. It was so hard to watch the movie because it was getting dark outside and then the sun came up and it was sunrise and it was almost the exact same movie, but I didn't know that at the time. I was sad about that, so sad. I remember that and also, I watched a movie and it was a different movie, but I watched a movie so that's what I did. I watched a movie with my eyes, the movie was about a man and a girl, but it was me and I was a girl, I didn't know why.
