PrivacyPolymeric materials based on polysaccharides, such as cellulose, have long been in demand. For example, hydrolyzed polymers made from cellulose have found use as adhesives, coatings, binders, paper coatings and a variety of other uses. The hydrolysis of cellulose to form such polymers is typically accomplished using acidic catalysts such as hydrochloric acid or trifluoromethanesulfonic acid, which can be expensive and difficult to remove from the desired polymer. An alternative hydrolysis procedure involves use of solid cataly 1d6a3396d6
