* Adobe Photoshop CS2, $425 An important update from the previous version of Photoshop. Among many new features are improved image editing tools, text, and drawing tools. CS2 includes an updated filter system with the ability to create three-band and four-band matrixed filters and to merge, animate, and create mosaics. * Adobe Photoshop Elements, $249 These versions of Photoshop do not have the power that Photoshop does but are great for images where you do not have the budget for Photoshop. Elements has many of the features of Photoshop, making it a great solution for basic image editing. Some of the features available in the current version of Elements include layers, filters, and an innovative eraser that's designed to work with graphics. Adobe's _Photoshop CS6,_ the most recent version, can be seen on the site at `www.photoshop.com/sH110H`.

Q: addEventListener to setTimeout doesn't work I'm trying to add an event listener to a setTimeout but it doesn't work for some reason. I'm even adding the event listener to window but still, it doesn't work. Thanks in advance. Here's my code: `Document setTimeout(function () { document.body.style.backgroundColor = "yellow"; }, 3000);` A: Because setTimeout sets an async event, the function will be executed after the other tasks. If you want to execute a task before the setTimeout, you can use addEventListener: `var body = document.body; body.addEventListener('load', function () { body.style.backgroundColor = "yellow"; }); setTimeout(function () { body.style.backgroundColor = "blue"; }, 3000);` Or the workaround: `var body = document.body; body.style.backgroundColor = "yellow"; setTimeout(function () { body.style.backgroundColor = "blue"; }, 3000);` Here's your code with this workaround applied: `Document document.body.style.backgroundColor = "yellow"; var body`

What's New in the Photoshop CC 2015 Version 16?

New York Governor Andrew Cuomo's office has assured that no concrete action is being taken against MTA and LIRR employees who are refusing to work overtime without a proper authority or authorization. The administration of the state's current chief executive, following an emergency meeting with MTA executives yesterday, ordered all Metro-North, LIRR and Amtrak workers to be back on the job by 8 a.m. today. The officials also met with MTA, LIRR and Amtrak workers who are on "strike" in a Brooklyn railroad station and at Penn Station, where they have set up camp at two entrances. They said they will stay there until their demands are met. At the last moment, Metro-North workers struck Monday morning, postponing scheduled talks. By then, the officials were already getting a battering. MTA and the LIRR blamed Amtrak on the job stoppage. Amtrak workers at Penn Station, where the strikers have set up a camp, also struck, saying they are concerned that the president of the national railroad will face a backlash if he comes down to the station on Tuesday. But the officials said no official strike has been ordered at Penn Station. As for the labor holdouts in Brooklyn, MTA chairman Joseph J. Lhota was more blunt. "You can be sure they will be put out of here," he told reporters, adding that "We will do everything we can to make sure that they leave here." But Cuomo's administration maintains that some of the current contract talks must take place at the LIRR. Meanwhile, he set a Tuesday deadline for the workers to return to work. "We would like to have this resolved by 5 p.m. so that the people who are inconvenienced by this can go home," he told reporters at a late morning press conference. "And by 5 p.m., we will have a resolution." But Cuomo said he's not going to wimp out after some of the state's state legislators let it be known that they want some answers. "I am not going to come up with a time table that will allow them to have the contract," he told reporters. He's not inclined to mollify them, he added. "I am not going to create an
