The official White House statement says the information comes from "intelligence reports" and come to the president's attention during the 2016 campaign. But the president's own account says he did not mention the issue of the former ambassador to Russia, Sergey Kislyak, and did not raise it with the FBI director. The president's extraordinary acknowledgement of the existence of Russia's meddling in the US election is a departure from the administration's earlier insistence that Moscow did not meddle in the White House race. The president's first account of the reason he and Comey discussed the Flynn investigation, after the former national security adviser was ousted over the phone calls he made to Russian officials, was that Mr Comey said the issue was very simple. "He [Mr Comey] said, 'Look, we are aware of that, and the report is very simple. He's just not very good at remembering things.' The FBI director said it's very simple," the president said. Mr Comey has told associates that the president offered him a highly favourable treatment in his handling of the investigation into former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's use of a private email server, according to a person close to Mr Comey. But Mr Comey said he would have to think about the matter. Mr Trump's comments come a day after the White House released his account of a February meeting at the White House where he told Mr Comey he hoped he was "free to go" and asked about the FBI investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 election. The exact contents of the February meeting
