Farm Craft 3 is a fun and addictive time management game for children and adults. The story starts with. More on News Many healthcare organizations are making strides in the use of IT to help improve patient safety and quality of care.

Some are even taking it a step further by integrating blockchain technology to their systems. "We're developing unique solutions, including blockchain-based solutions, that will enable our e-discovery offerings to become more efficient, effective and useful," said Steve Goldman, senior vice president of cloud computing for Citrix. "That's made possible by integrating blockchain with several Citrix solutions, including XenDesktop and Endpoint Management and Management Portal." In a recent Citrix survey, 51 percent of respondents reported their organizations are planning to integrate blockchain in the near future. A top reason cited by organizations looking to integrate blockchain technology was to enhance reliability of the system. "If you have an audit trail of activity, that audit trail needs to be secure and reliable," said Joe Busch, vice president of emerging technologies at Ellucian. "This is one of the ways in which blockchain technology can do that. In addition, we're using blockchain for cryptocurrency as an added benefit. When you start using it in clinical settings, you're looking at the ability to do things in digital currency that has high value." Interest is also high from large enterprises, such as financial institutions and retailers. Thirty-six percent of responding respondents said they're implementing or considering blockchain for general use in networks, while 52 percent are looking at it for supply chain management.

Only 14 percent said blockchain is being considered for customer experience management. Related Content Among other things, blockchain offers a secure mechanism to share data across disparate devices, and its public nature allows for verification. Blockchain is a distributed database that creates an immutable ledger of transactions shared between participants on the network. Blockchain is also useful for identifying fraudulent activity
