Q: How to create an interactive map with non-linear regions, based on the user's location? I'm building a site that's heavily based on user input, and will go through a number of different phases as the user inputs data over time. There are a lot of fields that will be user-controlled, and I'm thinking that to keep it simple I want to create a map with a set of lines that the user can click on, and it will display the user's location and the value for that location. The user's location is basic, it's just a longitude and a latitude, and I know these have been answered many times here on GIS.stackexchange.com, but what I don't know is how to make the map interactive. I'm looking to create a map like this: You can see that there's a linear track, and the lines show the users longitude and latitude. An example is the 'Pinegrove' or 'Whitley' tractors, which has a set of lines that you can click on. I know there's a way to use OpenStreetMap, but I'm not sure how to display the value for each line
