AutoCAD Architecture AutoCAD is based on a client-server architecture, a term that refers to the simultaneous presence of two main components: the client, or computer on which the software is running, and the server, a computer system where the CAD data and programs are stored. The server may or may not have the same capabilities as the client, depending on the features available on the server. A server may host other software or data as well. For example, the server hosting Autodesk's AutoCAD may also host AutoCAD-related data for other applications. To allow the client to communicate with the server, a special communications protocol known as TCP/IP is used. When a user chooses to upload or download data from the server, the communication channel is opened via TCP/IP. The user's computer acts as the client, and the CAD data and programs are stored on the server. The CAD data and programs on the server are organized into "objects". As soon as a CAD file is opened in AutoCAD, the data and programs in the objects are copied to a newly opened window on the client's computer. The client's computer is then responsible for running the CAD software, providing access to the data, and communicating with the server. Programs can also be stored on a server that runs a server-side application instead of the AutoCAD. In this case, the client software accesses the server to download the programs and data, and uses them to create objects. These are not copies of the programs and data stored on the server; they are a part of the

A word may be said about a proposal to reduce the summer school examinations to an hour in duration. This measure was brought forward by a delegate from the University of Pennsylvania, Mr. Bertram L. White. In the summer school examinations of the Ohio State Teachers College it was possible to learn a good deal in a short time and the examination was thus fairly easy to pass. It is entirely possible to give an hour's examination in one and a half hours and to prepare the teacher for the four years' work. This can be done in the Ohio State school and has proved satisfactory to all concerned. In this state there is a demand for trained teachers for a great number of small and inefficient rural schools. To meet this demand there must be prepared teachers for such schools and the examination must be one that will be fairly easy to pass. A comprehensive course in physical education should include a course in gymnastics. It should include the opportunity of practicing the art of gymnastics. Many young people are eager to learn to do the art of gymnastics satisfactorily and this is another good reason for incorporating such a course in the summer school. Gymnastics is a science as well as an
