Q: How to check whether a `set_defaults` schema madness run have occurred? The checks.py submodule of SQLAlchemy (1.0.12) provides a way to temporarily disable a schema's default value resolvers (set_defaults). However, for all its usefulness, set_defaults has a few drawbacks and is subject to misuse. The issue has been recently resolved (Python 2.7.4) and that resolution is available in Python 2.7.5, the set_defaults approach is no longer recommended (but possibly a solution to the enhancement issue is still desired). However, the `set_defaults` approach has a few distinct side-effects which make it undesirable for me and not everyone else. There is probably a better solution. One approach is to switch the `set_defaults` schema to a temporary "disabled" state, for example:

from sqlalchemy import Column, Integer, String from sqlalchemy import create_engine from sqlalchemy.orm import sessionmaker engine = create_engine('sqlite:///memory:', echo=True)
s = sessionmaker(engine)

News - October 11, 2015 UNIVERSAL READ The UN special rapporteur on torture has released his report on human rights in the US's "war on terror," based on a 19-month investigation. Torture abuses and prolonged solitary confinement of detainees have been documented by Mr. ACHR, as well as by human rights organizations like Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch and other bodies. The report emphasizes that the level of impunity regarding US crimes against the people of Afghanistan, Iraq, the Palestinian territories and other occupied Arab lands in which torture and extrajudicial execution have been used has been worse than that of Nazis atrocities in the same or any other time in the history of civilization. Many NGOs have voiced concern over the increased use of torture of targeted individuals and groups in the Western judicial and security services' responses to terrorist threats. The report further calls for the United States to establish a direct link between the international system of human rights and the conduct of its troops on the ground, and to mandate the protection of civilians under imminent threat of death in armed conflict. It also calls on the US authorities to investigate and prosecute crimes committed by federal agencies that have shared information with the CIA. Lastly, the special rapporteur has declared that entire populations that have been considered "illegal combatants" under the laws of war should not be held indefinitely in CIA detention centers or other sites. For more information see Human Rights Watch. International law UNHRC Voted to Declare Internet a Human Right On October 8, the Human Rights Council joined the rest of the world in commemorating the 100th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), at the opening of its 42nd session in Geneva. Almost all UN Member States participated, apart from the United States, Russia and Israel. The EU and the Arab countries were also represented. The document declared access to the Internet a fundamental human right, and called on states to ensure that citizens have universal access to the Internet and communication technologies. At the same time, “key human rights challenges” — that is, issues such as poverty, sustainable development and peace and security — also were raised. These goals embody some principles of the UDHR. While many states still grapple with poverty, the UN Secretary General’s report stated that “40 percent of the world population lives on less than $1.25 a day”; 5.3 billion people lack “hygiene and safe drinking water.” Importantly, the special
