Mango (horse) Mango (1895–1926), was a thoroughbred race horse who was exported to Australia where he was the Leading sire in the Victorian and New South Wales seasons of 1912 and 1919. Breeding Mango was bred in France by the racehorse owner Marcel Fauchon. He was sired by the American stallion Colonial, who had been imported to England by Sir Fitzwilliam Wills, the owner of the British racehorse Mill Reef. Colonial had sired Mill Reef, who had been exported to Australia in 1908. Racing career Mango raced in England in the 1905 Epsom Derby. From 1911 to 1915 he raced in New South Wales and Victoria, with a record of 10 wins, 3 seconds and 1 third placing. He also raced internationally as a two-year-old in 1906, where he won the French Derby and was second in the Irish Derby. Colonial's other progeny included Margarita, winner of the 1910 Epsom Oaks, Valide, winner of the 1912 Australian Derby, and two other horses named Victoria. Sires of an Empire In the 19th century mare sires had been exported from Britain to a wide range of countries. However, from the turn of the 20th century the criteria for mare export from the United Kingdom changed. Export mares now had to have been proven to the Stud Book or had to be owned by a prominent owner. As a result, British horse exports declined. In 1904 the stud book was closed to mares owned by foreign owners, while in 1907 mares of recognised breeding were allowed to be exported as long as the host country paid the export fees. However, this depended on each country being able to assess breeding ability. Mango was the last horse to be exported under the old regulations, and he was exported in 1909 to Australia, and given the name Mango. Mango was imported to Australia and immediately went to work in the Melbourne Stud where he won a number of important races. With the outbreak of World War I many of the European stallions and mares were sent to support their respective countries. Mango was therefore exported in 1916 to France to work at the Pas Delavalliere Stud. Transported to Australia In 1919 the Australian Racing Board decided to hold an eight-month autumn and winter racing carnival, held at Calder Park Racetrack, and Mango was sent to Australia to lead
