Station 4, Xbox 1, PS Vita.Q: How can I share a printer on a Windows network from Linux? I currently have a printer shared from a Windows XP system using Samba. I want to try printing from a network, and I'm wondering which approach I should take if any. I know I could ping the printer's IP address from my Linux box. I know that if the printer is on the same LAN as the client, I could also just try to print from the Linux box's web browser. What else can I try? Is there anything (client-side) that would be different, if I were using a Linux client? A: I can recommend TinyPrinter. It is a simple cli app. But I think the best thing about it is its simpleness. A: Zarathustra's Answer is "what you want to do"... which is not always applicable to all situations. The first option is that you should just use the IP address of the local printer, regardless of whether it has a Samba share set up or not. This allows you to use port 445 if it is shared over the network. However, you may want to change your current Samba share permissions to allow all but "root" users to access the printer. You can also use some tools to configure Samba to share the printer, but doing this can leave holes if you do not do it
