The K-9 Mail app is the first email client on the Android platform. It's powered by Akonadi and KMail, and it's free to download and use. It's part of the KDE Desktop and comes pre-installed on the KDE Neon and Ubuntu 17.10 images. Able to handle multiple accounts K-9 comes pre-installed with over 3,000 pre-installed or downloadable accounts. You can also add accounts through the K-9 web interface. K-9 is especially good at handling multiple email accounts. It can automatically handle multiple email account setup, and it handles multiple accounts seamlessly. You can also switch between the accounts using an intuitive button in the header bar. Searching emails K-9's search can be performed using several methods, such as the account name, the email subject or the sender email address. The first search results returned are displayed on the left column. You can then sort the results by date or name. K-9 has options to display the emails in the inbox, sent, trash or archived folders. If you wish, you can even arrange the inbox by account or the email date. The options that come with K-9 are: This article details the process for installing the K-9 mail client on Debian-based Linux distribution, Ubuntu and Mint. K-9 Mail is now available in the Debian multimedia repositories for Debian 9 (Stretch). As of now, K-9 Mail is only available for Debian 9 and Debian 9 derivatives. However, we do intend to extend this support to Ubuntu 17.04, Ubuntu 17.10, Ubuntu 18.04, Ubuntu 18.10 and Mint 18. Before we start, there are a few things to know about the K-9 Mail client. K-9 Mail is packaged as part of the KDE Applications 17.12.0 release. You can run the package from the Ubuntu AppCenter or you can download it from the Debian multimedia repositories. To install the Debian package for K-9 Mail, just execute: `sudo apt install k-9`

You can install the Ubuntu package for K-9 Mail by installing the k9-mail package. `sudo apt install k9-mail`

K-9 Mail looks pretty similar on all of these operating systems. Let's take a look at the process for installing K-9 Mail on Ubuntu.
