MUSIC: My main intent of the game is to provide players with challenges that require a degree of problem-solving, thinking, and attentive game play. Many zombie related games are made to be fun for 5-15 minutes and never require more than that. On the other hand, any game that provides my clientele with a high degree of satisfaction has a good chance of becoming their daily or weekly game of choice, which is what I hope this game does. GAMEPLAY: Players will be able to choose from three different game modes: "Kill," "Survive" and "Escape." The "kill" mode is where players will primarily interact with zombies. It is their only target and also the mode in which they will be rewarded for killing zombies. The "survive" mode is where players will primarily explore their surroundings, finding items and resources along the way. Each "kill" or "survive" mode provides the players with a map that showcases the kill/survive area and any enemies they may encounter along the way. The "escape" mode is where players will primarily find the items and resources they will need to escape their position. The game also has a little mini-game where players will have to kill or plant a zombie or two to get a reward. MULTIPLAYER: I will also provide players with an option to play in a party of up to four players. Multiplayer is an always in the works subject and can be installed and configured with a simple simple interface. I'm not sure if I want to do a LAN multiplayer but I will keep an eye out for any obstacles in the way. BUGS: I'm releasing a beta test on this game within the next few weeks, so there will be bugs. I'm sure I'll have many of them to fix but if you find a game bug please let me know. RELATIONSHIPS: I don't know much about relationships but I do know that no one is perfect. It's up to the players to decipher who is good and who is bad. I can't force players to make decisions that will punish them, but I can create situations for the players to solve and make decisions from there. I hope that makes sense. MINIGAMES: A game is like any other game, it has multiple levels

Features Key:

What's new:

, Finding Purpose by Battling Depression By David Hill Posted 3 years ago I recently spoke at a conference and was offered the opportunity to write a blog post about my experience. You can read the full post here. What follows is a version of that, which will be published in one form or another on this page. Thanks to David Holt who helped me edit this down from its initial six page manuscript. Listening to the speakers I recently spent five hours listening to the speakers at a major higher education conference. I was tempted to skip the opening set (the main presenter seemed completely out of place and struggled with the PowerPoint slides) and take notes during the next day of speeches. But finally, with running out of conference time, I managed to listen through half of the proceedings and took a few notes. These are a summary of my impressions and on describing my experience. The experience was delightfully exhausting. Just the effort of programming into my brain fifty very technically advanced presentations — on research methodology, HCI, the nature of learning, designing instruction, understanding how people study, and more — would normally have left me tired and frustrated. Even worse, I was able to apply none of this knowledge and saw common mistakes made by world leading instructors, not just in the sessions I attended but in the sessions I did not attend. After hours of listening and taking notes I emerged from the conference with feelings of guilt and sadness. I felt used and abused. I felt depressed. I feel sorry for many of those presenting at the conference, simply because the level of effort on their behalf it seems excessive. As well as feeling bad that the world had taken so much from the impressive speakers, I was also guilty for not doing more. I had the opportunity to explore and take advantage of some great sessions throughout the conference. It is a great shame that I did not know about these. Sure, they might have been too basic for me, or not the best fit for an audience that is of a different academic age. But just knowing about the sessions would have been enough to take advantage of them. If I had known all of the sessions better then I might have attended more and even given a talk or two. An experience of this length can leave you feeling very guilty. For the last few days I have been telling myself "there has been good done by an audience that should not have been taken," or "if the speaker would have built time into their contract
