Windows 10 Mobile (W10M) was announced in November 2014, with CEO Satya Nadella saying that it would be a key focus for the year ahead. To give W10M a chance, the company released a preview build in July 2015 and it was available to download from the Microsoft Store months later. However, since the preview versions were released, W10M has started to look different to the final release of the OS. In fact, when he revealed the date for the update, Nadella suggested that a final build for 2016 would come at the same time as Windows 10 PCs and devices. It seemed the one true Windows 10 device would be the Surface line, with the expectation being that if W10M wasn't ready then Microsoft wouldn't miss the deadline for PCs, tablets and phones. The release of the W10M update has been behind schedule from the start, and it's now clear that Microsoft has done everything in its power to delay the update. There have been some great upgrades like support for voice controlled Universal Windows Apps and Cortana on W10M, but there have also been some painful bugs to fix, and the lack of a stable device has meant that there hasn't been a device where users can try the update. Microsoft tried to make up for the lack of device support by promising to provide a device that would support the final build of Windows 10 from mid-2016. However, that device has failed to materialise and it seems this delay has given the company enough time to reduce the specifications of the device. Shown to journalists in September, the upcoming device is rumoured to be a low-cost variant of the Lumia 640 XL. The 640 XL was a disappointing device for Microsoft because it was plagued with

Congenital long QT syndrome is a major cause of sudden death in children and young adults. Using conventional techniques, this disease, which usually is inherited in an autosomal dominant fashion, would have been missed in a large number of cases. However, the use of QT-interval monitoring and T-wave alternans testing for fetal risk assessment has proved very useful in the identification of affected fetuses. Early in pregnancy, monitoring of maternal and fetal QT intervals and T-wave alternans has become a key prenatal test for counseling patients and parents before delivery, as well as for preventing sudden death in affected offspring.The present invention relates to a new and distinct cultivar of Petunia plant botanically known as Petunia×hybrida and hereinafter referred to by the cultivar name 'Balfancis'. The new cultivar originated in a controlled breeding program in Elburn, Ill. during April 2001. The objective of the breeding program was the development of Petunia cultivars with numerous unique and attractive colors and growth habits. The new Petunia cultivar is the result of cross-pollination. The female (seed) parent of the new cultivar is the proprietary Petunia×hybrida breeding selection designated 758-1, not patented, characterized by its light pink-colored flowers, medium green-colored foliage, and moderately vigorous, semi-upright growth habit. The male (pollen) parent of the new cultivar is the proprietary Petunia×hybrida breeding selection designated 758-2, not patented, characterized by its light pink-colored flowers, medium green-colored foliage, and moderately vigorous, semi-upright growth habit. The new cultivar was discovered and selected as a single flowering plant within the progeny of the above stated cross-pollination during July 2002 in a controlled environment at Elburn, Ill. Asexual reproduction of the new cultivar by terminal stem cut
