Use the Open command to open an image in Photoshop. Photoshop opens your image for editing and without changing the original image. You can make changes to your photo using the tools that are available and then save the file or send the file to others. You have multiple options for saving the changes. You can save an edited image in the file format that you originally saved in or save it as a different file format. You can also choose to Save a Copy to your computer. This allows you to alter the original image and save it. If you make a mistake and want to undo changes, then you can edit your saved image the way you made it. You can also save the file as a format that has a high resolution so that it can be printed more easily. The Save as option allows you to do this. You can use the File dialog box to open an image to be edited. Photoshop opens your image in the image editor and creates a new layer if you've not used any layers in your original image. You can modify any layer without effecting any layers below it in the image. (This is an important feature of Photoshop). If you choose to work on a layer, you can add layers, merge layers, move or rotate layers, and apply effects. You can work on multiple layers and switch back and forth between them, and you can save and close the file at any time.

's repentance is also essential for those who have seperated from their Shepherd. Yet how does the relationship differ from a "Spiritual" family relationship? Same principle of obeying? Yes. I've always thought the term is etymologically wrong. If by "proper family" you mean a living body or community, then I suppose you'd say the Christian "body" is a proper family, even while the members within it are estranged from one another. The Israelites had no "families" in the sense of families of the birth, i.e., the blood relationship (see Mk 11:25). By spiritual families, I was thinking of Scripture's focus on the union of the believer's soul and spirit with Christ. This does seem to imply a family-like relationship. Logged You are right. I apologize for having sacked Constantinople. I need you to understand that this was more of a administrative error than a military one, so thank you for your understanding. Sired, Lord of all Faiths. Indeed if you consider that families are formed by the blood or by the deeds of one's own flesh then it makes sense. Logged You are right.
