The charge will be made in the second half of a report by the Senate Intelligence Committee's study of the CIA's interrogation program, which is expected to be issued next month. It takes issue with a former CIA official's recent claim to The Washington Post that "the agency should be judged on its performance during the period of time that it was aware of the brutalizing effects of its interrogations." "The claim that the agency should be judged on the totality of its conduct in the decade after 9/11 doesn't acknowledge that it is the policy of the United States to deny torture and deny responsibility for the brutality of our armed forces," said Michael Ratner, executive director of the Center for Constitutional Rights and an internationally renowned human rights lawyer. "It's the policy of the e79caf774b
