Unfortunately, I recently spent time cleaning them and have now discovered they are covered in this very unpleasant substance. After researching it for a while, it seems the glass is coated in a mixture of polycarbonate plastic, wax and oils. I have cleaned them extensively (with different soapy water, rubbing alcohol, vinegar etc.), but they still look terrible. Is there anything I can do to get them looking better? A: I would use a dish soap-free glass cleaner. I would make sure the glass is completely dry and brush off any debris. Then just start with the glass with the cleaner. I would use a lint-free pad to scrub the cleaner in. A: I'd use a good quality glass cleaner and make sure it's dry well. However if it's been in a box for years, it's likely that it's been sitting in a humid environment. If so, the wax and oils will have solidified. If that is the case, I'd probably leave it. It would just be a mess to clean. If it can still be cleaned, I'd try some baking soda on a soft lint-free cloth. Scrub very lightly, and add water to a gel product like glass cleaner (preferable) to make a more thick solution to clean with. Another
