Q: Tableau Bar Chart + Group by + Max I have a tableau report that displays a bar chart where the totals of each stat are grouped by a property. When the report is ready, the users click on a button to view the full report. I want to remove the grouping and only show the max stat. See image below for reference. The total of each stat have been grouped by the "TimeInMinutes" property. I want the max for each stat. A: You can do this by applying "Secondary Axis" to the bar chart, then applying the MAX aggregate. Use the "Secondary Axis" button on the menu bar.

Kenya police focus on crackdown on ivory, rhino horn

JOHANNESBURG—Kenya’s Wildlife Service and police are working to stop poaching and smuggling activities in the country, following the deaths of three rhinos in the past two months and a spate of elephant killings and elephant poaching in the past two years. The discoveries of three dead rhinos last month in Nairobi National Park, near the capital Nairobi, and West Pokot District in the east, have drawn attention to what wildlife officials say are significant increases in the number of poaching attacks in the Kenyan conservation sector. “Poaching has really increased. We’re having more poaching this year than last year. It’s pretty sad,” said Martin Njuehmel, head of the Nairobi National Park Wildlife Service. “A lot of poaching is linked with the demand for ivory. We’re talking about an eight-fold increase in elephants killed in the last two years compared to the previous eight years,” he added. The Nairobi rhino killings have brought the attention of wildlife officials and law enforcement agencies to the poaching activities in the country. Kenya has also seen a sharp rise in elephant poaching in the past two years, with thousands of ivory tusks seized. Poaching activity in recent years has focused on Kenya

Edited June 18, 2018: Completely rewritten because most of the original text is now irrelevant. . Contents . Define a word if you can't apply it to something Alright so that model didn't work at all. I'm going to come up with a new one as well. If you construct vehicles of reasonable durability, and have enough mortar things are bound to happen. The easiest way I can think of to do this is to have each tier of vehicles require mortar (gold/silver tiers two and three are hardcoded this way I don't see a need to switch to vanilla at the moment with this) so getting a single vehicle can require hundreds or thousands of small (gunpowder and arrows) but well-placed weapons and the monster's combat stats will determine what sort of damage they do. It's basically how I'd do this with regular Solstheim's Vanilla's. Because I have no idea how the game works, that might be easier. Oh shit. Okay I'll be honest here I just made a mistake in designing this system, all the vehicles will start off with 100 internal 1hp wds damage. This is because a lone machine might cause 100 hp in damage on their own while the equivalent number of shotgun wielding humans would have trouble even doing 100 hp damage with a single piece of ammo. So to combat this I gave the destructive power of a rocket a little bit of kick in a turn by letting it do three 1hp weapons instead of two. Never mind. How about against obstacles. A word about how I designed this game. We'll do it by making a list of the different types of vehicles and monsters. Say for example we say that the list is vehicles, monsters, vehicles, and exploders. We can then divide the list into vehicles (including the exploders), monsters, and exploders. Each kind should have attacks that are unique to it and similar attacks. For example, a vehicle might have crushing attacks, exploding attacks, and then of course real direct combat attacks (running into the vehicle). A monster may have killing things or you could have a second combat phase when a monster dies and it spits out a bunch of guys/stuff. You make attacks that apply to any of the vehicles but please keep in mind, Exploder/Exploders are mutually exclusive. The idea for combat is that if there's more than one item attacking it that the damage is split evenly among
