Pulmonary and systemic hemodynamic responses to dobutamine. The cardiovascular effects of dobutamine were investigated in eight healthy men. The infusion of dobutamine (mean +/- SEM dose: 25 +/- 2 micrograms/kg/min) did not significantly change pulmonary or systemic hemodynamics (pulmonary arterial pressure, PaP; mean pulmonary artery pressure, mPAP; cardiac index, CI; systemic arterial pressure, SAP; cardiac output index, COI; pulmonary vascular resistance index, PVRI). Heart rate, systemic and pulmonary arterial resistance indices were significantly reduced and mPAP was significantly increased. The results indicate that, in comparison with isoproterenol, dobutamine, at equivalent doses, cannot be used to decrease PVRI. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an apparatus for facilitating care of a lamina papyracea in a human posterior fossa. More particularly, the present invention relates to a method for positioning a lamina papyracea and an apparatus that facilitates use of the positioning method. 2. Description of the Related Art Conventionally, shunt valve cerebellar diverticula have been treated by endoscopic surgery (for example, see WO 2006/081028). However, the diverticula tend to remain partially filled with cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) and usually contain no or only a small CSF component. Therefore, in treatment of a diverticulum, it is difficult to completely remove the CSF component from the diverticulum. The main cause of the CSF component in a diverticulum is regurgitation of the CSF from a foramen of Magendie. In many cases, foramen of Magendie
