Photoshop file format options Photoshop uses the EPS format for its vector images and the PSD format for its raster images. The EPS format is used primarily for bitmap images, as described in the next two sections, and is discussed more in-depth in the section "Getting ready to create," earlier in this chapter. File formats When you open Photoshop, you see a file or folder browser at the top left of the screen (see Figure 4-1). This is your _File Browser_ or _File Cabinet_. Files are organized into folders, like the one shown in Figure 4-1, and the types of files you see in this folder are _.psd,.eps,.jpeg_ and so on. FIGURE 4-1: Photoshop's File Browser offers a way to organize files and folders. An important part of the folder structure is that the folders are organized by the applications you use to edit images. You can organize your files and folders by dragging and dropping images into the folders. As an example, you may have one folder called _Outdoor_ and the Photoshop Elements folder is in this folder. The Outdoor folder is used for images you created with Elements, so it's logical to put images that you edit with Elements into the folder. That way, when you open the folder, you see only your images that you create with Elements. The archive utility Adobe Bridge can help you manage your images on your computer and the Internet. For more on Bridge, see Chapter 7. Photoshop's file format options are as follows: * PSD The oldest image format for Photoshop. For many years, it has been the primary format for editing raster images. It also works for bitmap images, which are covered in more detail in the later section "Image editing techniques." The PSD format is discussed further in the later section "Understanding Photoshop's layers and palettes." * EPS Part of the Photoshop format family, the EPS format is used primarily for bitmap images. You'll find it used for web pages and for making icons or other graphics. The EPS format is discussed in more detail in the next section, "File formats." * PSB The format's name stands for _

Brushes come in various shapes and sizes. Brush tips come in several colors. The brush tip determines the speed of the brush motion. To get started, a brush tip is selected, and the brush options screen is activated. At the bottom of the brush palette are additional brush tip options. Image 1: Click the Tool Options button at the bottom of the brush palette to access brush settings. To adjust the width of your brush, click the Width box and enter the appropriate value. Width is measured in pixels, so greater widths mean greater brush strokes, or strokes with larger areas. To adjust the length of the brush, click the Length box and enter the number of pixels you want. A longer brush will have greater coverage, while a shorter brush will have smaller coverage. To adjust the pressure of the brush, click the Pressure box. The brush pressure indicates the intensity of the brush movement. A lower value is better for fine detail, but a higher value is better for a broader stroke. Image 2: The Speed option adjusts the brush speed. For more details, click the Help button. The Flow option allows you to change how the brush strokes are rendered in the drawing. The options are: Flow Paint: Uses the Flow Paint algorithm to build up the brush strokes, which is good for applying fine detail. Flow Sculpt: Uses the Flow Sculpt algorithm to build up the brush strokes, which is good for applying overall brush strokes. Shadow's opacity is controlled by the Opacity box. Click the arrow to access Shadow and Gradient controls. Image 3: To adjust Shadow, click the Shadow box, and enter the amount of Opacity you want for the shadow effect. To create a Gradient, click the Gradient box and drag to a new page. Image 4: Click the arrow to access the Gradient settings. Gradients are typically used to color or add a shadow to an image, as shown in the example below. Image 5: Click the arrow to access the Gradient options. The Tint box controls the starting color of the gradient. The Midpoint box controls the midpoint of the gradient, which is typically the center of the image. The Saturation box controls the degree to which the middle (the Midpoint) and end (the Tint) of the gradient appear. Image 6: Adjust the gradients by adjusting the Tint and Midpoint boxes. When using the Gradient

This study reports an outbreak in Kenya of a gastroenteritis-like illness following viral infection with a GII.2 norovirus strain. The investigation followed a cluster of acute gastroenteritis outbreaks in July, 2007, in two regional referral hospitals in Nairobi, Kenya. Stool samples were collected from patients presenting to the hospitals with an acute gastroenteritis-like illness, including acute diarrhoea (63/63), vomiting (41/63), and gastro-intestino-isolation (GI) illness (65/63). The children with acute diarrhoea and GI illness were identified by clinicians and then asked to provide stool samples. Stool specimens from acute diarrhoea and GI illness patients were collected by the hospital staff and sent to the University of Nairobi for laboratory analysis. Stool samples were also collected from asymptomatic contacts (n = 42) of acute diarrhoea and GI illness patients and sent to the University for testing. PCR was used to identify GII.2 norovirus. The genome sequence of an epidemiologically linked GI.2 norovirus was determined. The outbreak affected 211 patients in the two regional referral hospitals. Forty-nine patients had diarrhoea, 47 had vomiting, and 54 had GI illness. Of the 49 patients with diarrhoea, 27 were children aged ≤15 years. Norovirus GII.2 was detected in 23 out of 30 stool samples obtained from symptomatic patients and GI illness patients in the hospital; 13 were associated with a cluster of acute diarrhoea, 10 with acute vomiting, and 6 with acute GI illness. Only 2 of 13 patients with diarrhoea had visited a water source of STDs in the week prior to their illness. Phylogenetic analysis showed that the GII.2 noroviruses were closely related to the GII.2 noroviruses that caused the outbreaks in Japan and Sydney in 2005, but they had a unique mutation, T267A, in the ORF1 region. The GII.2 norovirus was detected in 2 out of 42 stool samples from asymptomatic contacts. This is the first documented outbreak of GI illness with a GII.2 norovirus, outside of Asia.A Look at Immigration and Customs Enforcement's Proposed Crackdown on Asylees What's going on with the Department of Homeland Security's new immigration enforcement efforts?
