If you already have a good knowledge of the command line in OS X, and if you use applications designed for use with the command line (or *nix in general), then a good Linux alternative to Photoshop is **IrfanView.** We explain how to install it in Chapter 3. Figure 1-2 shows a selection technique that is so simple that you might be tempted to not even use Photoshop for this example. Perhaps you only use this image to get the thumbnail ready for some e-mail or social media sharing.

Photoshop is the industry standard because of its breadth of features and its library of plug-ins and filters. You can find plug-ins, which are simple to use, on the Internet for free or for purchase in many different online stores. But it also doesn't take very long to learn the basics of how to use the Photoshop command-line tools to create simple selections, adjustments, and enhancements. If you really want to get serious, then you can use the Photoshop plug-ins to make complex selections, cut out objects, create masks, and increase the size of elements, as well as work on a whole array of other Photoshop-specific features. The following steps show how to create a simple selection and then how to enhance it. To create a selection like this, you can just start by choosing a thumbnail for the e-mail or social media sharing, and you're ready to move on to the next step — making it look even better.

1. Launch Photoshop and select the selection option in the toolbar.
2. Click and drag to select the thumbnail for the e-mail or social media sharing. I show you how to select a multipage document in Chapter 3.
3. Click the

Select option on the status bar to set the selection. 4. Choose a color for the selection. See Chapter 3 for more on the techniques for choosing colors. Figure 1-3 shows the thumbnail after it's been selected. Figure 1-3: Begin with a selection in an image and enhance it with additional tools. 5. To make the thumbnail even better, use the Image Adjustments dialog box for your specific image. Click the Adjustments icon in the Edit drop-down menu, and you see the Image Adjustments dialog box shown in Figure 1-4. This feature enables you to apply image adjustments to

The U.S. Supreme Court rejected an appeal from developers of a $50 million tourism project, who wanted to be exempt from a ban on alcohol sales, slated to be built in Times Square. At issue were the provisions of the New York City Economic Development Corporation's (NYCEDC) alcohol ban, the "No Local Option Law." The ban, which was passed in 1970, prohibits liquor sales within a mile of the United Nations. Philip Gross, the lawyer who fought the city on this issue, said, "Given the law's success, businesses big and small have been put out of business trying to sell liquor in the area.”

Individuals, however, are allowed to serve alcohol in the area as long as they adhere to the restrictions of the law.

Gross explained that the law, though somewhat subject to interpretation, tends to prohibit a broad range of businesses from serving alcohol in the district.

Moreover, the law also severely restricts the number of liquor licenses in New York City. Currently, there are only about 3,000 retail liquor licenses in the city, which is significantly less than the roughly 20,000 restaurant liquor licenses. The court’s decision to uphold the ruling comes after a lower court refused to overturn a lower court’s ruling regarding the law. In late 2007, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held the law unconstitutional, prompting a lawsuit from the New York State Liquor Authority against the city, arguing that the ban violates state laws and the Constitution. As a result of the ruling from the appeals court, the New York Supreme Court ruled that the portion of the law that restricts liquor licenses in New York City was unconstitutional. Opponents of the ruling, however, appeal to Supreme Court. The Supreme Court denied the opponents' plea to overturn the lower court's ruling. The Court ruled that the liquor authority cannot force the city to issue more liquor licenses. The Court also held that the city could ban local liquor sales as long as the restrictions were consistent with the Constitution. The New York Chamber of Commerce and Industry told the media that the city was correct in excluding the local option from the center of New York. “The city’s prohibition on alcohol sales in the now-densified business district is constitutional. It is not arbitrary and capricious. Rather, the regulations are reasonable and

Q: Is there a set of expressions that are true under one semantics but not another? Consider expressions  $A$ ,  $B$ ,  $C$ , etc... Under one semantics, these expressions are all true:

$(A \rightarrow B) \rightarrow (A \rightarrow (B \rightarrow C))$  Under another semantics, these are all false:

$(A \rightarrow B) \rightarrow (A \rightarrow (B \rightarrow C))$

$(A \rightarrow (B \rightarrow C)) \rightarrow (A \rightarrow (B \rightarrow C))$  So clearly there are some expressions under which one semantics is true and another is false. Now, suppose we choose to assign truth values to these expressions such that all expressions under which one semantics is true are true and all expressions under which other semantics is true are false. Is there a set of expressions that are true under this semantics? Edit: after the responses to the question, I realized what I was trying to ask is if there is a set of expressions that is true in the first semantics, but false in the second semantics. A: Yes. There are sets of expressions that are true under one semantics, and false under another. For instance, the expression  $(p \wedge q) \wedge p$  is true under the first semantics, but false under the second semantics. (I'm assuming that  $p$  and  $q$  are variables rather than constants here.) A: By the principle of mathematical induction, there's a subset  $S$  of expressions such that  $S$  is true in the first semantics and false in the second. This is because the principle of induction says that any sentence which can be proven valid in the second semantics can be proven valid in the first semantics, and so we can choose to prove \$\$\$ in the first semantics.

Imbalanced T cell receptor V/D/J usage could be one of the major factors for the dysfunction of CD8+ T cells in systemic lupus erythematosus. Systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) is an autoimmune disease characterized by the production of anti-nuclear antibodies and B cell hyperactivity. SLE T cell immune dysfunction has been observed. In the current study, we explored the underlying molecular mechanisms and found that SLE T cell clones exhibited a marked loss of TCR V/D/J usage repertoire. Furthermore, SLE CD8+ T cell clones demonstrated a distinct pattern of TCR V/D
