Q: Naming convention for empty pages While revising a manuscript, what is the right way of not numbering the empty pages not numbering the pages that are in my bibliography Is the convention for these two cases the same? A: First of all, generally empty pages are numbered by putting a line in the header of the page, e.g. Title of the book, or the last number of the chapter, etc. Second, when the pages are numbered at the end of the list, not at the beginning. If you want to skip numbering the whole list, you can do that by putting "--" at the start of the document or the chapter, if that's the desired effect, but it's harder to do that by simply omitting page numbers.
