During drills to open the Panthers' bye week, Newton left the practice field because of cramps in his right hamstring. His status for Sunday's regular-season finale in Indianapolis is uncertain. Backup Derek Anderson started the day's practice, but he was pulled from the field after two series. General manager Dave Gettleman said the Panthers plan to play Newton against the Colts, but that decision will be based on Newton's health and what the team sees from him during practice this week. Panthers coach Ron Rivera said Wednesday that Newton was "day to day." So are the Panthers' chances of making the playoffs, which looked slim when Newton was shelved for most of Carolina's second game against Atlanta. With the Panthers at 3-8 and Minnesota on a three-game winning streak, Rivera said the team was too far removed from being a contender to make any guarantees. "I don't want to make any comments like that. I don't know how we're going to look at this
