It has been held every four years since it was established in 1991, with the final being played at some point during June. Any female football player aged 16 years and over is eligible to play, with the exceptions being the following: (i) players who have played a FIFA Women's World Cup match or a match in the qualifying competition or play-offs of the previous three editions, and (ii) those who have played in an international match in their respective national teams or clubs between 1 July 2016 and 31 May 2019. The Phoenix, Wisconsin, City Council recently voted to join a proposed federal action to prevent fracking in the area. The council took this step in response to the increased publicity and concerns from residents of the city and the surrounding area who have recently voiced their opposition to the industrial activity. They are the first local government in the state to make this decision and they've followed through with an energetic discussion and review process. As of this writing, there is no fracking activity in the area. According to a press release: Some question whether a ban is the best
