Endoscopic distal pancreatectomy (EDP) has recently become the technique of choice for the treatment of benign and high risk/malignant pancreatic cysts. However, the indications and types of cysts that are suitable for this treatment have not been clearly defined. To clarify the eligibility for EDP, we retrospectively evaluated the clinical features and the outcomes in patients with benign or high risk/malignant pancreatic cysts who were treated with EDP at our institution. Between October 2001 and July 2012, 45 patients underwent EDP, including 19 patients with benign, 20 with high risk and 6 with malignant pancreatic cysts. The median patient age was 58 years (range, 29-80 years) and there was a male-to-female ratio of 1.25:1. The mean cyst size was 16.3 mm (range, 10-37 mm). There was no operative death, and postoperative pancreatic fistula occurred in 2 patients (4.4%). The surgical margin was negative in c6a93da74d
